DILEMMA OF A PERFORMING LEADER

Ishaan is a Regional Head in one of the leading consumer durables company. The company has structured the Regions as independent Profit Centres and all functions report into his position. Ishaan has been an important leader to the organization as he helped grow the company from a start-up to a 100 crore turnover organization. Ishaan's performance in individual capacity has been superlative and is extremely confident about his actions. In his team there are four core members who have been with him from the last seven years, helping him steer his vision. Ishaan promised growth and development to all these associates, and one of them, Virat got most of his attention. Virat has been an extremely hard-working achiever and his strategic mind-set is well ahead of his colleagues.

This lead to creation of a power Centre around Virat and gradually everything started revolving around Virat and Ishaan. Other team members are feeling 'left-out' and are losing confidence in the actions of Ishaan. The politics in the organization due to Virat is running wild and he ensures that no other team player gets the attention of Ishaan. Shaurya, who was the marketing head of the region also quit due to the friction between the associates. Few of the other 'old' team members also have left the organization and the new associates are taking their places. Some of the newcomers are able to create their space and perform while others are not able to find a bearing in the current structure. Ishaan has realized this scenario but has no way to control the Frankenstein. The regional organization is still growing very well due to the efforts of Ishaan and Virat. The region is moving at a high speed and the challenge to the leadership is to sustain this growth. The plans for the new year are aggressive but he knows that the team is not geared up for this challenge.

What action steps would you give to Ishaan if he reaches out to you for advise?

PROVING YOUR CONTRIBUTION IN THE COMPANY

Kiya is a Marketing Lead in a Pharmaceutical company. She is working in the current organization since the last three years. She is bright and a very likeable person. Her employee engagement score is very high but, she has been facing a challenge in proving her contribution in the organization. She often shares ideas to improve the sales numbers, but mostly the team members consider those to be lofty. The team is not able to see the current structure commensurate with the idea, though everyone would like to taste the sweetness of achieving the same. Many-a-times she has helped her manager in coming out of difficult conflict situations. She is struggling with inter-departmental pressure from Sales and finance to justify the efforts of her department.

Many conflict scenarios are arising resulting in unnecessary discussions/ meetings which are consuming her work hours.  She prefers to take the team with her and most of the times the project dies while building this synergy. On the other hand, the team members want her to be present in every meeting as she has the capacity to stitch conflicts arising between them. At this juncture, it has become a challenge for her to prove her worth to the company on a piece of paper.

What advise would you give Kiya to clearly show her contribution in the company ?
